social mobility in europe is the most comprehensive study to date of trends in intergenerational social mobility it uses data from 11 european countries covering the last 30 years of the twentieth century to analyze differences between countries and changes through time the findings call into question several long standing views about social mobility we find a growing similarity between countries in their class structures and rates of absolute mobility in other words the countries of europe are now more alike in their flows between class origins and destinations than they were thirty years ago however differences between countries in social fluidity that is the relative chances between people of different class origins of being found in given class destinations show no reduction and so there is no evidence supporting theories of modernization which predict such convergence our results also contradict the long standing featherman jones hauser hypothesis of a basic similarity in social fluidity in all industrial societies with a market economy and a nuclear family system there are considerable differences between countries like israel and sweden where societal openness is very marked and italy france and germany where social fluidity rates are low similarly there is a substantial difference between for example the netherlands in the 1970s which was quite closed and in the 1990s when it ranks among the most open societies mobility tables reflect many underlying processes and this makes it difficult to explain mobility and fluidity or to provide policy prescriptions nevertheless those countries in which fluidity increased over the last decades of the twentieth century had not only succeeded in reducing class inequalities in educational attainment but had also restricted the degree to which among people with the same level of education class background affected their chances of gaining access to better class destinations
