agriculture was the basis of the egyptian economy when muḥammad alī founder of modern egypt was appointed governor of egypt by the ottoman sultan in 1805 dr rivlin s purpose is to discover if muḥammad alī had a well conceived agricultural policy of lasting significance for the development of egyptian institutions the conclusion reached after careful analysis of the problem from every facet is that far from having an agricultural policy per se muḥammad alī merely utilized the agricultural wealth of egypt for the purposes of personal aggrandizement and the attainment of a position of great power and independence for himself and his descendants within the ottoman empire the measures taken by muḥammad alī affecting land tenure replaced one class of landholders by another to the detriment of the peasant class and the religious institution although the pasha can be credited with changing the egyptian economy from a subsistence to a cash crop economy by the investment of capital in the development of agriculture the financial benefits gained thereby accrued primarily to the pasha himself instead of using these profits for economic purposes muḥammad alī embarked upon a program of military adventurism that eventually undermined the economic life of the country and brought only limited political gains to egypt muḥammad alī s domestic policies established the social and economic pattern which prevailed until the egyptian revolution of 1952 and are largely responsible for many of egypt s present problems dr rivlin s study is of major importance to students of the contemporary egyptian scene and should serve as an object lesson for present planners in underdeveloped countries from dust jacket
