we live in a period of great uncertainty about the fate of america's global leadership many believe that donald trump's presidency marks the end of liberal international order the very system of global institutions rules and values that shaped the american international system since the end of world war ii trump's repeated rejection of liberal order criticisms of long term allies of the us and affinity for authoritarian leaders certainly undermines the american international system but the truth is that liberal international order has been quietly eroding for at least 15 years in exit from hegemony alexander cooley and daniel nexon develop a new integrated approach to understanding the rise and decline of hegemonic orders their approach identifies three distinct ways in which the liberal international order is undergoing fundamental transformation first russia and china have targeted the order positioning themselves as revisionist powers by establishing alternative regional institutions and pushing counter norms second weaker states are hollowing out the order by seeking patronage and security partnership from nations outside of the order such as saudi arabia and china even though they do not always seek to disrupt american hegemony these new patron client relationships lack the same liberal political and economic conditions as those involving the united states and its democratic allies third a new series of transnational networks emphasizing illiberalism nationalism and right wing values increasing challenges the anti authoritarian progressive transnational networks of the 1990s these three pathways erode the primacy of the liberal international order from above laterally and from below the trump administration with its america first doctrine accelerates all three processes critically lessening america's position as a world power
