what the establishment can't grasp is that you can get a better education from two years with Vista or the Peace Corps than from four years in your major universities. Donald Eberly's spirit of the above statement by Donald Eberly is also the guiding spirit of his proposals for national service as set forth in his recent book National Service: A Promise to Keep. Eberly would like to bring a Vista or Peace Corps sort of service experience to every young person who desires it, not only to those with specialized training or college experience. The notion that experience, especially service experience, can be highly educational and an impetus for personal growth is a root of the national service idea. Along with Eberly's interesting, informative narrative history of national service, the book contains a number of articles by Eberly, others as well as an extensive bibliography on the subject. The sum is a fine resource for study, discussion of an important topic, one which may prove to hold solutions to many of the problems we face today in the years to come.

This report examines the importance of learning communities within institutions of higher education. It identifies two important dimensions of learning communities: 1. primary membership, which differentiates based on the characteristic that group members hold in common; these include learning organizations, faculty learning communities, and student learning communities; and 2. primary form of interaction, which differentiates based on group members' methods of interaction, such as in person, physical interaction, virtual interaction, or nondirect interaction through correspondence. Four categories of student learning communities are identified: curricular learning communities, classroom learning communities, residential learning communities, and student type learning communities. Benefits for students and faculty of effective learning communities are documented and include higher academic achievement, better retention rates, diminished faculty isolation, and increased curricular integration. Suggestions for maximizing learning in virtual communities include focusing on a common goal and organization that include preparation, planning, and reflection. Contains approximately 225 references. DB.
