the old indian stopped his truck at the base of the mountain and got out he walked slowly to the horse trailer behind and brought out his favorite mare already saddled he walked the horse to the front of the truck and let the reins fall limp to the ground he reached into the cab of the truck and brought out two small boxes and placed them in the saddlebags he mounted the horse and they walked slowly into the moonlit night the indian running bear listened to the night as they walked slowly for the inexperienced walking these woods at night even under the best conditions could be a hazardous undertaking but this

indian and his horse had traveled this path many many times he held the reins loosely in his hands and commanded the horse with gentle nudges from his knees the horse responded without delay and maintained a steady easy gait for two and a half hours they walked the silence was deafening no birds sang no coyotes howled no trees rustled even though there was a mild breeze in the air no sound except the hooves of the unshod horse striking the ground finally the indian and his horse came to a small clearing halfway up the mountain it was a spectacular view even at night seldom seen by anyone not of the wolf river tribe the old man dismounted removed the saddlebags and walked to the edge of the clearing where the view of the valley below was panoramic he sat on the ground and with his knife dug two holes into the soft dirt keeping the top sun bleached dirt separate from the darker soil beneath when the holes were three feet deep he stopped and reached into the saddlebag for the first box the box was handmade of pine and appeared to be very old he opened it and inspected the contents as he had done several times before tonight an eagle feather with a leather tong wound tightly around the base a scrap of cloth from a boy s shirt a child s baby tooth and a lock of hair carefully tied and resting in a thick clear plastic case remnants from a time long passed not much to show for twenty three years the old man thought he placed the items neatly in the box and closed it there was no lock on the box and the lid would not be nailed shut it was simply placed in the hole the second box was withdrawn from the saddlebag and likewise inspected another case with a lock of hair an eagle feather the same as the other box another scrap of a boy s shirt another tooth a portion of an arrow with the stone arrowhead still attached not much to show for twenty one years this box was placed in the other hole the dirt was filled in on both the sun bleached dirt applied last to conceal the final resting place for his two sons the extra dirt was gathered up and spread out around some desert blooms near the edge an unsuspecting visitor would have great difficulty finding this place the old man cut a branch from one of the bushes nearby carefully concealing the cut he spread the branch across the ground to conceal his footprints and those of his horse as he walked back down the mountain he stopped at another clearing this one smaller but still with a clear view of the mountain and valley below he stood quite erect and raised his arms above his head he prayed to the great mystery and asked the spirits to accept his sons he chanted the same chants used by his people since the beginning of their history he would chant until daybreak then return to the world below
