the early barrow diggers

first published in 1936 and rewritten in 1953 this book embodies the results of the author's extensive researches and fieldwork part one considers types of barrows and dating their building and the cult of the dead from palaeolithic to saxon times a chapter is dedicated to maps and another to fieldwork in particular while the final bit of the introductory material discussed barrow digging from the time of the romans to the twentieth century part two is the regional surveys from cornwall to kent and northwards to the scottish border van riper recreates scientists first arguments for human antiquity placing these debates within the context of victorian science using field notes scientific reports and previously unpublished letters he shows also how the study of human prehistory brought together geologists archeologists and anthropologists in their first interdisciplinary scientific effort a vivid account of how the discovery of human antiquity forced victorians to redefine their assumptions about human evolution and the relationship of science to christianity a report of recent excavation of five early bronze age barrows undertaken by cornwall archaeological unit all are complex monuments revealing episodes of remodelling and reuse despite being broadly comparable with similar radiocarbon determinations there are major differences in both the form and intensity of activity between the barrows this study is about the early medieval landscape and the people that lived in that landscape it is about stories and storytelling the creation of memory the invention of home spirituality and social hierarchy above all though it is an account about living in a mutable landscape and the stories people once told there when philip marsden moved to a remote creekside farmhouse in cornwall the intensity of his response took him aback it led him to wonder why we react so strongly to certain places and set him off on a journey on foot westwards to land s end through one of the most myth rich regions of europe from the neolithic ritual landscape of bodmin moor to the arthurian traditions at tintagel from the mysterious china clay region to the granite tors and tombs of the far south west marsden assembles a chronology of britain s attitude to place in archives he uncovers the life and work of other enthusiasts before him medieval chroniclers and tudor topographers eighteenth century antiquarians post industrial poets and abstract painters drawing also on his travels from further afield marsden reveals that the shape of the land lies not just at the heart of our own history but of man s perennial struggle to belong on this earth this is a great work by one of the pioneers of modern archaeology the period covered is from 1700 to 700 b c and is mainly concerned with the author s field work in western britain it deals with burial ritual dances processions houses of the dead the objects deposited the building of the barrow and it shows by line drawings and photographs how scientific excavation nowadays is planned and executed the book gathers together an immense amount of research completed over a long span of years on burials and the ceremonial which attended them originally published in 1959

this volume looks at the history of the study of human remains and how new scientific techniques have massively expanded what we know about our neolithic ancestors a unique and detailed history of the south west of england written in a clear and accessible style a wonderful resource for any local historian amazon com
