edition of d h lawrence s last book apocalypse along with other writings on the revolution

a corrective addendum to Edward Said's orientalism this book examines how sympathetic representations of Islam contributed significantly to Protestant Britain's national and imperial identity in the eighteenth century taking a historical view Humberto Garcia combines a rereading of eighteenth century and romantic era british literature with original research on anglo islamic relations he finds that far from being considered foreign by the era s thinkers islamic republicanism played a defining role in radical enlightenment debates most significantly during the glorious revolution french revolution and other moments of acute constitutional crisis as well as in national and political debates about england and its overseas empire garcia shows that writers such as edmund burke lady mary wortley montagu samuel taylor coleridge robert southey and percy and mary shelley not only were influenced by international events in the muslim world but also saw in that world and its history a viable path to interrogate contest and redefine british concepts of liberty this deft exploration of the forgotten moment in early modern history when intercultural exchange between the muslim world and christian west was common resituates english literary and intellectual history in the wider context of the global eighteenth century the direct challenge it poses to the idea of an exclusionary judeo christian enlightenment serves as an important revision to post 9 11 narratives about a historical clash between western democratic values and islam
