the workplace is changing drastically these days as a consequence of the information and communication technology ict revolution new economic activities emerge the production process changes people use different communication tools and organizational structures are adjusted all these changes relate to the heart of business and economics and there is no doubt that they will also influence education in these areas of course ict provides new technologies to facilitate learning but a changing workplace also requires a renewed focus within the curriculum of economics and business education if ict is leading to profound change in the workplace is innovation then only a matter of introducing more technology in education unfortunately this is not necessarily true the translation of changes in the workplace into an improved curriculum requires serious analysis of the essence of the changes at the work place and the way technology may enable student learning for example relevant knowledge is changing faster and faster does this mean that we have to adopt the curriculum faster and faster perhaps not as students will have a labor market career of 30 or 40 years focusing on today s knowledge even if it is very up to date loses more and more value if the life cycle of knowledge becomes shorter increased speed of change also implies a decrease in the value of knowing all these things this workshop questioned the reliability of pottery as crisis indicator within the archaeological data set more particularly following the perspective of archaeological and anthropological research that assesses pottery technology as a social product there is an interest in addressing the social and cultural aspects of technological change
