what duties do liberal democratic states owe to refugees does international refugee law impose unfeasible demands on states this highly original contribution explores what theories of international ethics have to say about refugee policy it advances an innovative critique of prevalent liberal approaches showing how their assumptions about moral agency create unfeasible expectations about international justice it sets out an alternative theory showing how this could be more adept at mobilizing commitment to refugee rights the volume will be of interest not just to scholars and students of applied ethics but also to those more generally interested in debates on refugee and migration policy it presents a clear and thorough discussion of liberal political theory and its application to questions of international justice and provides insights into the philosophical sources of debates on liberal versus restrictive approaches to refugee policy this book is a philosophical analysis of the ethical treatment of refugees and stateless people a group of people who though extremely important politically have been greatly under theorized philosophically the limited philosophical discussion of refugees by philosophers focuses narrowly on the question of whether or not we as members of western states have moral obligations to admit refugees into our countries this book reframes this debate and shows why it is important to think ethically about people who will never be resettled and who live for prolonged periods outside of all political communities parekh shows why philosophers ought to be concerned with ethical norms that will help stateless people mitigate the harms of statelessness even while they remain formally excluded from states the open access version of this book available at doi org 10 4324 9781315883854 has been made available under a creative commons attribution non commercial no derivatives 4 0 license the current refugee crisis is unparalleled in history in its size and severity according to the unhcr there are roughly 67 million refugees worldwide the vast majority of whom are refugees as the result of wars and other military actions this social and political crisis cries out for normative explanation and analysis morally and politically how should we understand the fact that 1 in every 122 humans is a refugee how should we respond to it and why jennifer kling argues that war refugees have suffered and continue to suffer a series of harms wrongs and oppressions and so are owed recompense restitution and aid as a matter of justice by sociopolitical institutions around the world she makes the case that war refugees should be viewed and treated differently than migrants due to their particular circumstances but that their circumstances do not wholly alleviate their own moral responsibilities we must stop treating refugees as objects to be moved around on the global stage kling contends and instead see them as people with their own subjective experiences of the world who might surprise us with their words and works while targeted toward students and scholars of philosophy war refugees risk justice and moral responsibility will also be of interest to those working in political science international relations and foreign policy analysis and more broadly to anyone who is interested in thinking critically about the ongoing refugee crisis syrians crossing the mediterranean in ramshackle boats bound for europe sudanese refugees their belongings on their backs fleeing overland into neighboring countries children separated from their parents at the us mexico border these are the images that the global refugee crisis conjures to many in the news we often see photos of people in transit suffering untold deprivations in desperate bids to escape their countries and find safety but behind these images there is a second crisis a crisis of arrival refugees in the 21st century have only three real options urban slums squalid refugee camps or dangerous journeys to seek asylum and none provide genuine refuge in no refuge political philosopher serena parekh calls this the second refugee crisis the crisis of the millions of people who having fled their homes are stuck for decades in the dehumanizing and hopeless limbo of refugees camps and informal urban spaces most of which are in the global south ninety nine percent of these refugees are never resettled in other countries their suffering only begins when they leave their war torn homes as parekh urgently argues by drawing from numerous first person accounts conditions in many refugee camps and urban slums are so bleak that to make people live in them for prolonged periods of time is to deny them human dignity it s no wonder that refugees increasingly risk their lives to seek asylum directly in the west drawing from extensive first hand accounts of life as a refugee with nowhere to go parekh argues that we need a moral response to these crises one that assumes the humanity of refugees in addition to the challenges that states have when they accept refugees only once we grasp that the global refugee crisis has these two dimensions the asylum crisis for western states and the crisis for refugees who cannot find refuge can we reckon with a response proportionate to the complexities we face countries and citizens have a moral obligation to address the structures that unjustly prevent refugees from accessing the minimum conditions of human dignity as parekh shows there are ways we as citizens can respond to the global refugee crisis and indeed we are morally obligated to do so
